Colorlib.com, original provider of auto layout for iPhone apps, just released a new version of the app for iPad: Auto Layout for iPad. This is a unique app whose aim is to simplify the task of 3D layout of your iPad apps (or any IOS app). By now, if you've already worked with a 2D iPhone app layout, you've probably built a neat and flexible interface. But many of you may have discovered that designing a layout in 3D for iPad is a painstaking, time consuming and often frustrating process. UI and content authors must build complex 3D models first using 3D modeling software, then they turn them into FBX models, then set blueprints for the 3D scene they want; this is the time-consuming process of creating an interface in 3D for an iPad app. On the other side, App devs rarely choose to use a layout with the app that comes from the App Store, because of the complexity of their creation, so they usually have to recreate one from scratch, which can take time and resources. Now, thanks to the new Auto Layout app, app authors can speed up their iPad app layout process and even create it from scratch in a fun and intuitive way. Auto Layout for iPad 3.0 lets you create the app layout by simply dragging interface elements on a canvas and aligning them in 3D with a freehand guided interface. With Auto Layout for iPad 3.0, the previously difficult 3D space is now mapped to 2D square layouts. The app displays small squares like a floor plan showing where elements of the app must be placed, eliminating the app maker's need to create a 3D model of the layout.
